BASED ON A TRUE STORY
SAMBER

The acclaimed new series by Oscar-winning director Jean-Xavier de Lestrade.

A story of decades of collective blindness.

Late 80's in Northern France, women are being sexually assaulted along the same road by the Samber river – with attacks taking place early mornings and in a similar style. The police fail to get to grips with the extent of these assaults or make a connection between the cases. The justice system is overwhelmed by the accumulating cases. It will take 30 years to catch a man, who never stopped attacking women and is responsible for at least 54 cases of rape or sexual assault. Samber is a thriller that recounts the progression of the investigation, and its repercussions from the 80's through to 2018 and the beginning of the #metoo era.

Breaking record figures in prime time on France 2 and on france.tv, Samber is the most watched series in France Televisions' platform history.

A former lawbreaker, Castaneda is also a loving father with a somewhat headstrong personality, who hasn't always walked on the right side of life. But these days he has only one goal: to give his daughter the very best he can. To achieve that, he takes odd jobs and does everything in his power to conform to society's norms. But things take a turn when his daughter goes missing and he is prepared to do whatever it takes to find her. When someone disappears, the first few hours are critical, but the police stations are understaffed... So, Castaneda decides to take matters into his own hands, and investigate himself with the help of other individuals, normal everyday people without any diplomas, or privileged backgrounds, who are just willing to scour the countryside to track down the kidnapper.

Anti-establishment, resourceful, and very much in touch with the people, could Castaneda and his team be in a much better position than the police to find her?
